THE HARVIE FAMILY ASSOCIATION OF HANTS COUNTY, NOVA SCOTIA

The 1990 edition of Harvie's Bulletin includes updates on the family history, a letter from 1815, a petition from the 1780s, a story about life on the farm 60 years ago, news of visitors to Nova Scotia, another mystery branch and recent obituaries.

The number of people using personal computers for genealogy continues to grow. The Genealogical Association of Nova Scotia recently sponsored a workshop where four different genealogical software programs were demonstrated. My book, The Harvie / Harvey Family of Hants County, Nova Scotia was originally done using Wordstar, a word processing package. The information it contains is now being transcribed into Personal Ancestral File format along with the many corrections and additions that have come to light in the six years since the book was published. Once complete the data will be submitted to the LDS Family History Library in Salt Lake City. If accepted in their Ancestral File database the information will be made available to researchers via CD-ROM disks at all the Family History Centres across the U.S. and Canada.

As always, your news and comments are welcome and appreciated. The bulletin is distributed without obligation to everyone with an interest in the history of our family.

VISITORS TO NOVA SCOTIA

At a seminar in Halifax last summer, part of a university Elderhostel program, Dr. Alan Marble, the speaker, help up a copy of the Harvie/Harvey Family of Hants County as an example of a published genealogy. Two members of the class reportedly jumped to their feet, both having Harvie roots and never expecting their search for information to be so easily realized. Barbara Miller of Pompano Beach Florida, a descendant of 2213-Loran Harvie and Russel Edwards of Punta Gorda Florida, a descendant of 1486-Jemima Harvie did not previously know each other nor have any idea that work had been done on the family here.

A LETTER TO MR. JOHN HARVIE NEWPORT

This letter appears to be a reply from a British soldier stationed in Halifax to 3-John Harvie (1730-1822) of Newport. John Harvie we know was the son of Andrew Harvie and Janet Speir of Dalry Ayrshire Scotland. In his letter it seems that John Harvie named his grandfather as Robert Spears, possibly related to the soldier and hence the reason for the correspondence. The author, Andrew Spears, at the end refers to John Harvie as "grandfather" and himself as "your grandson" presumably in respect for John Harvie who would have been 85 years of age at the time.

Melville Island

April the 4 1815

Dear Sir

I received your few lines with pleasure telling me that your father was Robert Spears and a soldier. My father's uncle was Robert Spears and a sergeant in the army and settled in America, some place where I can not tell never seeing him and my people being all the old .... from Scotland giving me to think he is the same. I have the opinion I shall get my discharge as the peace is most sure between America and Great Britain. I expect it either by money or getting 2 men in my place. I have got a good wife, it is true but for my part I shall not say, as there are many long days to be observed in a man's lifetime. Dear grandfather I am partly convinced we are related by blood as I have a brother Robert and a sister ... It gives me to think the names of the old family runs amongst us still and continues me to think the more and more confident of it. So, I add no more but remain your grandson- Andrew Spears, Sergeant 4th Regiment.

A PETITION TO THE HONORABLE ISAAC DESCHAMPS ESQ.
JUDGE OF PROBATE OF WILLS

Newport ye 4th January (year unknown, 1786 est.)

The petition of Ales (Alice) Harvie the wife of John Harvie and James Harvie and Margat (Margaret) the wife of the said James Harvie Humbly showeth whereas the said Margat Harvie received a goose from her grandmother for which end she was to take care to save feathers to make a bed and it was agreeable to her Honour father to keep geese time after time for that purpose upon his farm and there is the seed of her geese on the said farm now and your petitioners Humbly pray that the said Margat Harvie should have a bed though it was invent(ori)ed in her fathers Estate neither Grandfather nor Mother thought anything of the bed nor herself if you think it proper as she and her husband is just going upon his farm since this snow is come so as he can carry his goods if you please send an order and your petitioners in Duty Bound shall for ever pray ...

MYSTERY BRANCH

Continuing a feature begun last issue, information on a stray branch of the family is listed in the hope that someone can provide the missing piece of evidence required to place them correctly in the book. The article in the Hants Journal of 1904 appears to confuse the husband John with the son George. There were at least three sons, two of whom drowned.

? JOHN HARVIE b. 1828 d. 3 Oct. 1896 bur. Meander Cemetery married 1855 at Portland Maine, AMY OLIVE MOSHER b. 1836 d. 1910 at Southboro Mass. daughter of Alexander Mosher and Hester Fish. A blacksmith.

"Mrs. H. J. Small and little son George leave for Boston December 12 after visiting her mother Mrs. Olive Harvey since last July and stayed longer than anticipated due to the death of her brother (Capt. Harvey) at sea. Her mother is almost prostrated by the sad news." - Hants Journal 1900

"Mrs. Olive Harvey, Brooklyn who last week sold her effects intends to make her home with her daughter, Mrs. Harry Small in Boston. Her husband, Capt. George Harvie of the ship Shenandoah was drowned when the vessel was 4 days out of New South Wales for San Francisco. Of her two sons, one was drowned and Norman went to the Klondike 2 years ago and has since not been heard from. Hope that the coming years will be more brightness as a compensation for the darkened past". - Hants Journal 1904

1891 GAZATTEER OF SCOTLAND

Dalry, a town and a parish in Cunninghame district, Ayrshire. The town stands on a rising-ground between Rye and Caaf Waters, and at the right side of the river Garnock, 3 furlongs W by N of Dalry Junction on the main line of the Glasgow and South-Western railway, this being 15½ miles SW of Paisley, 22½ SW of Glasgow, 70½ WSW of Edinburgh, 11½ NW of Kilmarnock, 9 NE of Ardrossan, 6½ N by W of Irvine, and 17½ N by W of Ayr. A tract of country around it was anciently under special royal jurisdiction, and bore the name of the King's District or Valley (Gael. dail-riagh); and a field on which its first houses were built was called the King's Field (Gael. croftan-riagh), a name that it still retains in the slightly modified form of Croftan-gry. The parish church, St Margaret's, dependent once upon Kilwinning Abbey, and originally occupying a different site, was rebuilt on that field about the year 1608, and gave

Harold Gloade

The Grindstone

By Harold Gloade

Joe Harvie owned a farm in Kelleyville on a sideroad near Skull House. It was a quiet place, where one seldom saw a car, or for that matter, any kind of a vehicle pass their gate. From the farmyard, you saw rolling hills on one side, and gentle flatness of a fertile interval on the other, and a narrow brook meandered through the fields, crossing the sideroad, and disappearing into the thicket beyond, eventually spilling into the Halfway River. The house was painted white at one time, but the rest of the buildings were bare wood, for it seemed only the more affluent could afford paint on outbuildings.

I am not sure if he had a pair of horses or just one, and I don't remember him hauling anything to Hantsport, but he came to our place when we lived where the Strickland barn is now, to plow up the ground for us to planting. I remember that it was near the middle of July before he came, because, as he said, he was swamped with work of his own to take care of.

"It's kinda late," I said to Daddy. "It'll be winter before we can dig them up!"

"Don't worry," he told me, "there will be plenty of time to grow a good crop."

Daddy wanted the garden among the apple trees, and Joe didn't want to hold the plow and drive the horse among the trees, so he had me lead the horse by the bridle. I was only fourteen years old at the time, and as I led the animal up and down between the tree, I had to step lively to keep my feet clear of the horse's rather large hooves. We had nearly finished the last furrow, when I couldn't make another step, because one of the hooves landed on top of my foot, and I was anchored.

I wasn't in pain, because the corks were at each side of my sneaker, the flat part pressing it down into the soft earth, anchoring me on the spot. Try as I might, I couldn't budge the animal. It probably weighed about 1800 pounds while I barely weighed more than a hundred, and standing so close, I couldn't get leverage. Joe, who never remembered my name for as long as I knew him, stood at the plow handles, looking for all the world as if he were trying to push it, kept shouting at me.

"Get goin' boy," he yelled, but I shouted back at him yelling. "He's standin' on my foot!"

What?" shouted Joe.

"He's standin' on my foot," I shouted back, "and he won't move."

The old man muttered something under his breath as he came up to the front to see for himself. After seeing me up against the horse's head, he took the bridle and gently moved the horse to the right, freeing my foot.

"Are you hurt bad?" A genuine look of concern on his face as he spoke to me.

"It don't hurt at all," I answered, wiggling my toes inside my sneaker. "The corks didn't touch me."

"Thank goodness," he said breathing a sigh of relief. "I still need you to finish this furrow." As he walked back to the plow handles, I heard him say, "don't walk too close to the horse's feet."

We finished the furrow, and pulled the plow to the side, then he hooked up the spring toothed harrow. Joe sat under a tree while I led the horse up and down the patch until the ground was all worked up, then we hitched to the plow again and made furrows for planting, and the job was done.

There was a good view of the farm from the Bishopville Road which was on high ground. Since there were just Mr. and Mrs. Harvie on the farm, I had little reason to go there, except when Daddy needed to grind his ax, and I was commandeered to turn the crank. I suppose I have had many miserable jobs in my lifetime, but I am quite sure it is safe to say that none were quite as miserable as having to turn the grindstone while my father sharpened his ax. Of course, it didn't help, that the shaft of the stone turned on bare wood. It didn't help a bit when Daddy pressed down hard on the stone, acting like a brake; and it goes without saying that after every ax grinding, we were not the very best of friends.

At the end of every grinding, I vowed to be nowhere near home whenever Daddy needed to grind his ax, but he kept a sharp eye, giving me the impression everything was fine, then he would spring it on me.

"Come with me, Harold, he would say, "we're going down to Joe Harvie's to grind my ax."

Things got so bad with me, that I even sneaked down to Joe's farm to tell him not to let Daddy grind his ax there anymore, but before I could even bring up the subject, Joe smiled at me, beckoning me to follow him out to the equipment shed.

"I'm glad you're here, boy," he said, "the cutter bar on my mowing machine needs sharpening, and I need someone to turn the crank."

I could feel my jaw dropping down to my knees. This was going to take forever! There would be either sixteen or twenty teeth to grind on both sides, depending on the length of the cutter bar.

When we got to the shed, and he looked over the teeth, he shook his head a little, saying, "I guess these teeth are worn out. "I guess I'll just change them." He looked up at me and said, "I'll need you to hold the bar while I knock out the rivets and put new teeth on."

It took a little more than an hour, as I held the bar on the anvil while he skillfully knocked out the rivets holding the worn teeth, using a punch and the sharp crack of his blacksmith's hammer, then re-rivet new ones in their place. When it was done, I helped him insert the bar onto the mowing frame, and attach the ball to the pitman arm, and the mower was ready for action.

After the job was done, I couldn't help but be impressed by his complete command of his machinery, and some years later, when I worked for a custom combiner in Texas, the boss was just as impressed with me when I was able to replace worn sections of the twenty foot scythe with new ones. And it was all because I helped Joe Harvie with his cutter bar on a day when I was trying to wiggle out of turning the grindstone so Daddy could grind his ax.

About the garden? That September, we dug up a garden full of nice potatoes for the winter. It wasn't too late after all...

origin to the town. The site is eligible enough for a seat of traffic and industry, and commands an extensive southward and north-eastward view; but, owing to great freshets in the Garnock, the Rye, and the Caaf, it sometimes has almost the aspect of an island. The town was long no more than a pretty hamlet, in 1700 comprising but six dwelling-houses, and about the beginning of this century numbering barely 800 inhabitants; afterwards it rose somewhat speedily to the dimensions of a smallish town, with a population of about 2000 in 1835. Some nine years later it started into sudden importance as a seat of business for the great neighbouring iron-works of BLAIR and GLENGARNOCK; and then assumed, along with its environs, an appearance so different from what it had borne before, that a visitor acquainted with it only in its former condition would hardly have known it for the same place.

It contains great numbers of well-built modern houses and not a few excellent shops, and has a central square, a post office, with money order, savings bank, insurance, and telegraph departments, branches of the British Linen Co. and the Clydesdale banks, hotels, gas-works, town buildings, library and reading-room, public hall, assembly rooms, woollen factories, a worsted mill, an oil and stearine factory, etc. The manufacture of wool may be said to be the principal trade of the town. Thursday is market-day, and a fair is held on 31 July and 1 August. A gravitation water-supply, capable of affording 130,000 gallons per diem, was introduced in 1876 at a cost of £9000; and in the centre of the town is a handsome granite fountain. A new public park, the gift of Mr John Blair, W.S., was in 1893 presented to the town. The parish church was rebuilt in 1771, and again in 1871-73, the present being a cruciform Gothic edifice, with over 1100 sittings, stained windows of Munich glass, and a tower and spire 159 feet high. Other places of worship are the West, Kersland Barony, and Blair mission churches, a Free church, a U.P. church, an Episcopal church, and St Palladius' Roman Catholic church (1851; 500 sittings). A memorial mission hall was erected in 1888, the cost of which, between £3000 and £4000, was defrayed by the Rev Dr Stevenson. Besides Kersland Barony school at DEN, the 3 public schools of Blairmains, Townend, and West End (enlarged at a cost of £3000), and Dalry female industrial Church of Scotland school, with respective accommodation for 100, 360, 625, and 192 children, had (1891) an average attendance of 37, 205, 537, and 153, and grants of £30, 10s. 6d., £186, 10s. 3d., £527, 13s. 6d., and £133, 17s. 6d.

The parish contains also the villages of Blair Works, Burnside, Den, and Drakemyre, with part of Glengarnock. Very irregular in outline, it is bounded N by Kilbirnie, NE by Beith, SE by Kilwinning, S by Kilwinning and Ardrossan, W by West Kilbride, and NW by Largs. Its utmost length, from NNW to SSE, is 9 miles; its breadth, from ENE to WSW, varies between  $\frac{1}{2}$  mile and  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles; and its area is 19,361 acres, of which 77 are water. The river GARNOCK, coming in from Kilbirnie, flows  $6\frac{1}{2}$  miles south-by-westward through the interior and along the Kilbirnie and Kilwinning borders; it is followed throughout this course by the Glasgow and South-Western railway, and receives on the right hand RYE and CAAF Waters, and Bombo Burn and Dusk Water on the left. The surface, sinking in the extreme S to 85 feet above sea-level, thence rises north-eastward to 239 feet at Muirhead, 334 at Bowertrapping, and 357 near East Middlebank—north-north-westward and northward to 302 near Linn House, 869 at Gill Hill, 1099 at BAIDLAND Hill, 1216 at Cock Law, 1261 at Green Hill, 652 at CARWINNING Hill, and 1378 at Rough Hill, whose summit, however, falls just within Largs. The rocks are partly eruptive, partly carboniferous. Limestone has long been largely worked; and coal is mined of excellent quality, partly in seams from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 5 feet thick. Ironstone, of very rich quality, began to be worked about 1845, when two farms which had been sold to the Glengarnock Iron Company for £18,000 were shortly afterwards resold to the Blair Iron Company for £35,000. Agates have been found in the bed of the Rye. The soil along the Garnock is deep alluvial loam, and to the E of it is chiefly thin, cold, retentive clay. In some parts to the W of the Garnock, it is an adhesive clay; along the base of the hills, has generally a light dry character, incumbent on either limestone or trap; and elsewhere is often reclaimed moss. Antiquities, other than those of Blair and Carwinning, are cairns and a moat near the town—the Courthill Mound, which, excavated in the winter of 1872, was found to contain large deposits of human bones and ashes. The Blairs have been lairds of Blair for well-nigh seven centuries; one of the line, Sir Bryce, was foully murdered at Ayr by the English in 1296. Another of
